in fiction we can discover a body of creative work that astonishes us with its possibilities but where we may wonder are stories rooted in the desire to tell one s own story in the desire to understand another s story particularly in the love of words the presentation of designs or the response to designs through which some lovely powerful imagined thing is brought into being a universal emotion an unusual world a time of personal decision a green thought billowing under a green shade each a fiction perhaps a refined lie conceivably by a personal and social and cultural myth the selections offered in the possibilities of story are meant for the ageless scholar or teacher settling down happily with a book at a desk or in an armchair these selections are meant also for the perpetually young adult perhaps one who may become a writer or critic who enthusiastically seeks out volumes of stories from considerate acquaintances or at a favorite bookstore or library but these selections are meant especially for the kid nipping off to read somewhere or maybe sprawled on the living room floor we the three of us are all one
